FRIDAY, JULY 2, 1933.

An Evening Echo.

There is no duty we so much under-gate as the duty of being happy. By being happy, we sow anonymous benefits upon the world, which remain unknown even to ourselves, or when they are disclosed, surprise Stephens.

The small boy who is compelled to "take it back" after blusteringly talking up to his better informed companion, can sympathize with the Democratic administration which is now proclaiming the success of the postal savings bank though the Democrats in Congress fought it as hard as they knew how.

Fact against Theory.

"However much we may differ as to the exact character of the causes, this much is certain: "That in this country prosperity has invariably accompanied protection, while business and industrial depression have just as invariably gone hand in hand with free trade."

This statement, made on the floor of the Senate in September, 1913, by Senator Sutherland, of Utah, proves that statesman a true prophet. The sooner we stop theorizing and get back to the sound basis of protection and prosperity the better it will be for American people and American interests.

Protect Labor.

American labor should be protected by tariff duties that at least equal the difference in cost of production at home and abroad. Temporary shortage of world supply may maintain prices for a time, as in the case of wool, but placing on the free list commodities produced in competition with cheap labor abroad must ultimately bring hardship to American industry.

The American farmer should be aided in borrowing money at rates of interest as low as paid by others who give security equally sound, but it is more important that he be aided in securing such a price for his products as will relieve him of the need of borrowing except in case of emergency.

Juggling the Figures.

Even the most resourceful mathematician finds it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to use any comparative statistics in such a way as to bring credit to the present administration. Some, however, make desperate efforts to put the figures together in such a way as to relieve Democracy of its burden of discredit. In attempt of this kind, one Democratic newspaper refers to the fact that railway earnings for April, 1915, was $33,821,308 as compared with $32,232,791 for the same month in 1914, an increase of a million and a half.

Even though that is comparing one Democratic month with another and, therefore, proves nothing, the good showing is entirely reversed when the Democratic editor finds himself forced to admit that the gain in net earnings "is not due to an increase in gross but to a decrease in operating expenses. That decrease in operating expenses must mean either reduced wages, reduced purchases or reduced employment. In any event, it means less money for the workers on railroads or in railroad shops. Nor is that all, for the same editor goes on to admit that although gross earnings "were down $2,000,000 for the month (April) they were down $79,000,000 during the preceding nine months, or an average of nearly $9,000,000 a month."

While most people will be glad to know that the roads aided by increased rates and by renewed industrial activity due to the war, are not as badly off as they were, it is difficult to comprehend what satisfaction a Democrat can get out of presentation of statistics showing the depths to which railroad business had sunk within recent months.

Pure Food Law.

No other national legislation within the last quarter of a century, has done more to protect and promote the health of the American people and prevent financial loss through fraud and deception than has the national pure food law, which was enacted in 1906 by a congress that was Republican in both branches, and signed by a Republican president.

This law was peculiarly a Republican idea for it asserted the power of the general government to enact legislation of this kind, a power which was denied by Democrats who were advocates of the doctrine of states rights. President Wilson apparently overlooked this law when he said recently that the Republican party had not had a new idea in thirty years. The only votes cast against the bill were by Democrats, and one of those was by Congressman A. S. Burleson, of Texas, now postmaster general, the only member of that Congress specially honored by President Wilson.

While commonly referred to as a "pure food law" the act regulates the manufacture and sale of not only food, but drugs, confectionery, medicines and liquors, insures purity, prevents misbranding, prohibits adulteration, requires full weight and measure, and forbids use of poisonous and deleterious substances. The law requires that if certain habit forming drugs be contained in a medical preparation, that fact shall be plainly stated on the label and be printed in red ink. It prohibits the use of alcohol contained in medicine be specified. It prohibits removing part or all of the contents of a receptacle and substitution of another article different from that indicated on the package. In the case of foods put up in packages, it requires that the weight or measure be specified on the label. Sale or packing of partly decomposed meats is forbidden. All these provisions were necessary for the protection of public health and for the prevention of fraud in the manufacture and sale of food and drugs.

The enactment of the pure food law was largely due to the persistent recommendations of a Republican president. The bill which became a law was introduced in the senate by a Republican senator, Heyburn of Idaho, and although it had only four votes in that branch of Congress, those four votes were recorded by Democrats.

The bill met more vigorous opposition in the House where a minority report was filed against it by Representatives Adamson, Barlett and Russell. Democratic members of the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, who asserted that pure food legislation is a matter within the jurisdiction of the several states, and not within the jurisdiction of the general government.

Only seventeen members of the House and the temerity to vote against the bill but every one of these was a Democrat. The pure food bill was one new Republican idea that they couldn't approve.

CODY.

There are not many towns left that are as typical of the West of the days of romance as is Cody, Wyoming. When the streams in the dry country go on a rampage as occur once in half a dozen years, they sweep beyond their shallow sand beds, bear down through the lowlands of a whole valley and gather up innumerable cottonwood limbs and other debris.

When the flood has subsided and the sun of an arid summer, with palm brush like unto the tail of a comet, has spread its neutral and somber gray over the landscape, the bleached remains of the burghers that were borne by the flood are to be found in the rifts of driftwood along the water course.

So do these western towns seem to be but handsets that have been caught from the tides of humanity that surge back and forth in a popular world. Bare hills and limitless plains extend to north, south, east and west, and in the center of it all there is the squat habitation of the man creature, planted as a mustard seed to ultimately overrun the whole.

The cattlemen ride over the hills and look down upon Cody in the valley with a checkerboard as its pat-tern. There is the two-story brick hotel in the center of the town with the hitching racks on two sides, and here the cow ponies switch flies from their bodies through the long days. One-story merchandising establishments flank the right-angled streets, the hardware man, the dry-goods store, the saloon, the Chinese restaurant. The cowboys' club is the street corner and here are told the tales of the round-ups and of the experiences in guiding tourists on camping expeditions, for this latter is a brand new industry here, developed and technically known as "dude wrangling."

A butte like a pyramid looks down on Cody, and here is "Buffalo Bill" to be buried when he dies, there to hover in the spirit as the guardian genius of the town that was his special care in life and which bears his name.

Yet a giant sleeps in this straggling western town. It is the gateway on one side to that widest of wonderlands, the Yellowstone Park, which may be reached by Crystal Lake Pass amid the snows of August. The Shoshone River cut through a mountain chain above Cody and won its way to the plain. These men of the West have driven a cement wedge into the canyon that has wedged these two mountains together again and made of itself the highest dam in the world. It makes a lake that stores water that is led down past Cody to the plains where a town, is being built every dozen miles. The hills are being rent apart and coal mines of inestimable wealth opened up. Iron rails that might bind two sides of a continent together lie dormant in these mountain sides.

The buffalo trails are gone, the Sioux and the Cheyenne no longer dominate the water courses, there are

NOTICE TO WATER CONSUMERS

All water consumers desiring to use a lawn sprinkler in connection with the domestic supply must first obtain a permit from the office, and any person or person using city water without first obtaining a permit shall be liable to a fine of two dollars per day for every day said water is so used.

In sprinkling street each water taker must confine himself to the number of feet mentioned in his permit. Nozzles larger than one-fourth of an inch will not be permitted, except upon additional charge, and sprinkling without a nozzle is forbidden.

Sprinkling streets and lawns is restricted to two hours per day, one hour between five and ten a. m. and one hour between five and eight p. m.

If a street sprinkler or hose is found out of order, leaking or used for any other purposes than that for which it is intended, the supply will be cut off without previous notice.

RAISE CHICKS ELECTRICALLY.

Hatching and raising chickens by electricity is proving a paying experiment at Merch's farm, Poole, Eng., said to be the largest chicken farm in the world. During the past six months over 4,000 chicks have been hatched and raised under electric influence. The incubators are heated electrically. After the chicks are hatched they are placed in pens in a building, surrounded with insulated wires.

The five-week-old chicks, under this electric influence, reach the normal growth of three months under ordinary conditions. Their food flavor is also superior. The average loss is less than six out of four hundred in comparison with at least fifty per cent of the chickens hatched under ordinary conditions who die before their maturity. Chickens which seem took weak to stand when first hatched and which would not live a day under the usual methods, develop into strong healthy birds under electrical stimulus.

THE BASKET.

The boy from Mara is clever and Has all the railroads skinned. He goes up in his aeroplane, And anchors to the wind.

It was a lovely summer day. Love-ly. The little fleecy clouds, sailing so blithely in the sky, were crooning happily, and the angworms chirped tauntingly at the late bird. (See footnote.)

Sigsmond Wallop, on his way to market (he had the market basket on his arm) gave a shout of joy as he saw on the front lawn the Bobbs-Merrill aeroplane that he had ordered the previous week.

"I must try it!" he cried. "I must try it immediately!"

"But you're taking the basket with you. Leave the basket with me!" besought his wife.

"Don't beseech me, I'm too excited!" he replied, and climbed into the loaded aeroplane with the market basket.

"Pauncefoot!" she cried. "Don't take the basket!"

But he paid no attention. With one turn of the F-sharp clutch, he was soaring up over the barn.

Had he known, he surely would have harkened to his wife and left the basket behind. It would have been so much easier to gather him up!
